The present invention relates to a proppant production system, and more particularly, to a system and method for preventing the build-up of sand on the surface of a proppant material conveying device, such as a pipe, a roller, a drum or a screw. The presence of sand on a surface of a proppant producing device, such as a pipe, a roller, a drum or a screw, results in several problems. The problems include not only damage to the proppant production device, but also inefficient operation, and excessive wear of the devices parts and tools. For example, a build up of sand on the surface of a pipe may result in a clog in the pipe, as well as other problems, such as stopping of the material flow through the pipe. If the sand is moved to the top of the pipe, the filter cake may block the screen elements of the pipe and reduce the efficiency of the process, including the production and removal of the proppant material. Accordingly, there is a need for a system and method of reducing the amount of sand that builds up on the surface of a proppant producing device. Are you a "Realist"?
