The clinical manifestations of non-Hodgkin lymphoma may vary widely. We describe a case of cutaneous non-Hodgkin lymphoma with intravascular lesions in a patient with a pericardial mass that was the sole manifestation of the disease. A 46-year-old woman presented with a 1.2 x 1.5-cm left lower chest wall mass and 3-month history of nonspecific epigastric pain. The patient had no clinical evidence of lymphoma or local invasion of the mass at the time of presentation. An ultrasound demonstrated a large echogenic mass in the left ventricle, with direct extension to the pericardial space, and no other lesions in the mediastinum. A computed tomographic scan showed no tumor involvement of the cardiac chambers or myocardium. The patient underwent excision of the pericardial mass that revealed a high-grade lymphoma. Histopathologic evaluation was consistent with cutaneous lymphoma, and tumor-free margins were confirmed on the patient's left chest wall. The physical findings of pericardial mass should not dissuade physicians from invasive and potentially curative therapy; in this case, a rheumatology c9d1549cdd

FasL has been implicated in the direct killing of Fas-expressing tumor cells, via a mechanism that does not require additional signals. In this study, we report that infection of tumor cell lines with an adenoviral vector (Ad.FasL) encoding FasL resulted in an apoptotic signal. The presence of the FasL gene was associated with a pronounced reduction in clonogenic survival following infection with Ad.FasL. The loss of clonogenic survival was both time- and multiplicity-dependent and exhibited dose dependence. The loss of clonogenicity could be partially prevented by treatment with anti-Fas monoclonal antibody, even in the absence of functional Fas. FasL-expressing cells did not efficiently attract Fas-expressing or Fas-deficient lymphocytes, although in vitro cell-cell adhesion experiments showed that the FasL-expressing cells were normal. Our results demonstrate that FasL gene therapy for tumors can be achieved with adenoviral vectors and that it can be fully effective, even in the absence of Fas-FasL interactions.Tissue responses to cultured tumor cells and the effects of Staphylococcus aureus. Cultured tumor cells were injected subcutaneously into mice and the elicited tissue reactions were compared to those induced by live tumor cells, by established cultured tumor lines, and by somatic extracts of tumor

The Centauri Dominion is a campaign setting and an expanded miniatures role-playing game supplement for the Savage Worlds role-playing game. Like the original GDQ setting, two hundred and fifty years have passed since the galaxy was attacked by an unknown aggressor and the remaining planets of the United Planets of Terra fell into chaos. The thirty known habitable planets of the Union of Planets have been thrown together into one super-planet, with Earth, the home of the humans, at the center. The body has been renamed the Republic of Centauri and is a neutral party, rotating its posts of power in an attempt to prevent nations from revolting or tearing itself apart. However, some humans are certain that this will be the start of the long decline of humanity and have dedicated themselves to seeking out the raiser of the deadly attack and the war machine that did the killing. A story prompt is included for players to forge the background of any characters they create. The players who placed first and second at the 2007 The Dice Shelf event received custom dice sets. Campaigns Worlds of the Union of Planets is approximately 3.5 to four times as large as the original GDQ setting, but none of the areas are the same. In earlier editions, the Silver Tide area of the original GDQ was the only area whose name had a source, in this case Pacificia (at the time named "Paradise"). The main setting also now features an alternative sequence of events that goes against the events in GDQ instead of mirroring them (although this sequence is considered to be non-canon for newer editions of the setting). The objective of the main story campaign series is for the players to oppose the Centauri in acquiring their victory, either by peaceful means or by force. The first scenario, Sisters in Arms, is set in Earth's ancient Odyssean culture and introduces a new full-scale scenario of instigators. The second scenario, The Triumph of Zart, provides a setting for a chain of stories that focuses on an event that takes place after the Battle of Earth and concludes with an unimaginable disaster. Several other scenarios make use of the alternate story sequences. The remainder of the area covers the twelve planets of the realm, starting with the four closest habitable planets (Earth, Centalla, Druida and Celesta), and moves outward as the galaxy progresses in time. The novel The Rings of Saturn contains 14 scenarios that feature a total of
