With its first videogame photography technology, Lucas Arts combined its high-tech lucidity fetish with a real-life object such as a tree. With the Luna camera, viewers will no longer need a human angling the camera to view what they see, but will experience the visuals just as the artists intended.

The gamer-grade image quality and slow mo effects are powered by the new Virtuix Omni VR technology. The system creates a haptic feedback that helps gamers “feel” the tangible world.
