It should log according to the date & time on console As such, I will not want to hard-code the date in the script but put this information from the shell itself. A: There is Date on

Unix: #!/usr/bin/env bash
```

log_file="/var/log/log.date.$(date
+\"%Y-%m-%d | tr -d '-')\" while true;
do # Log something echo "logged"
>> "$log_file" # Quit echo 'bye' exit

0 done

This takes the date stamp from the date command and inserts it into the file name so that it can be identified unambiguously. log_file will be created if it doesn't exist, but log files will not be updated if you run the script. If you want to update log files all the time, use touch instead of echo. Search Search for: About the Web Donate There are many ways to get involved with helping people in developing countries. One of the most popular ways is to get involved with a charity. Why? Well, charities help people who cannot help themselves. They help people who are poor, homeless, hungry, sick, and disabled. However, although charities help people in need, they do more than that. They also give back e79caf774b
