There are no client reviews yet.Q: An Inequality involving the Powers of the Triangle I would like to show that, for a triangle A, B, C with sides a, b, c respectively, $\frac{a}{b+c} \leq \frac{b^2-c^2}{a+2bc}$ However, I am having trouble seeing why this is true. Any and all help would be greatly appreciated! A: The ratio $\frac{a}{b+c}$ is clearly positive, and $\frac{b^2-c^2}{a+2bc} = \frac{b^2-c^2}{a+2bc} \cdot \frac{b+c}{b+c} = \frac{b^2-c^2}{a+2bc}$ and so it follows. Circadian Rhythms, Melatonin and Fasting This series of articles is based on many years of my research and clinical experience with circadian rhythm, mind and body and fasting, with the aim of helping you to understand what could be the most important aspect of your health. This is the third in the series and I'm going to tell you about the circadian rhythms, sleep and how the rhythm might be affected by Fasting. Many things are circulating through your mind when you think about the relation between your circadian rhythm and Fasting. Among them are: "If you don't eat anything for 24hrs, you will die". But is that really true? What about the 6 month breast cancer survival rate for women that don't eat for 24hrs after their treatment? What if the 1 year survival rate for people with blood disorders that don't eat for 24hrs? Do cancer patients thrive, survive or die on a diet that doesn't have any calories during 24hrs? I'm sure you have heard all these questions before. Now is the time to look at these questions again with fresh eyes and let's try and answer them. Firstly, we have to be clear about the definition of "normal" for circadian rhythm. The definition is that it is a 24hrs/day, 24hrs/night circadian rhythm. With that in mind, the sleep of an animal that eats once per day is the same as the sleep of an animal that

The last time there were photos of the flat-tailed nightjars in the wild was in 2000. Researchers have set a target of two years to track the birds to figure out why populations across Colombia, Ecuador and Peru are collapsing. Other bird species have declined in the Amazon, likely due to changes in the environment and agricultural development, as well as human activities. And where rainforest cover has been lost, other species have taken the opportunity to fill the void and take advantage of food sources. But among the nightjars in particular, the problem is extreme, said Richard Vigne, director of the research project at Brazil's National Institute for Amazonian Research. "We have a very worrying situation in which we could lose the nightjar from the entire basin. We've got four very important populations for this species — Colombia, Ecuador and Peru, and one in Suriname," Vigne told NBC News. This site is protected by recaptcha "The other species that could disappear is the red-footed nightjar (Caprimulgus macrodactylus), which is in an even more endangered situation than the nightjar." The birds are also facing extinction because their rainforest habitat is shrinking, and their populations are declining, due to the destruction of their breeding grounds. "It is getting harder and harder to find suitable habitat for the nightjars and to find these suitable places to nest," Vigne said. Nightjar populations in Colombia and Ecuador are in steep decline, while the opposite is happening in Peru, he said. In Colombia, the research project has identified the Mocoa population, in northern Colombia, as a hotspot for biodiversity. "On the one hand, it has these organisms that are even harder to find than nightjars, like the giant armadillo, the killer bee and the giant otter, so they are great organisms to look for," Vigne said. "On the other hand, they are a threatened species," he added. "It really is a unique situation." All of this comes as the world's ecosystems are under pressure from human activity. "We've got so much anthropogenic pressure now in the Amazon, from the agriculture, the wood, the plastics, the agricultural
