12, 1900. He was the youngest of six children. His father, Ramon Contreras, was a prominent mining engineer and entrepreneur who owned a number of mines in Peru. He was the most famous miner in the South American country.

His elder sister was a well-known journalist and writer, Concha Platero. They were raised by their maternal aunt, Isabel de Jesus, who was a social activist and poet. In 1905, their father died in a mining accident and Isabel made her family temporarily move to Santiago de Chile. In 1909, his mother's family moved again to Lima, Peru, where he was enrolled in the Ateneo, a Jesuit educational institution. He displayed great interest in physical activities, most notably swimming, and was an accomplished swimmer. He also became an amateur boxer and was a member of his school's boxing team. On Feb 6, 1911, he passed the first Class of Engineering when he graduated from the Ateneo. He then attended the School of Mining and Metallurgy at the University of Chile, Santiago, Peru, and his engineering degree at the University of Chile, Santiago, Peru. He obtained his degree from
