Color patterns for each model are random, but don't worry! All Pokémon will begin with a same color pattern. Information about Pokémon Generations The World Championships is a competition where the Pokémon company assembles and invites the world's greatest trainers and their Pokémon to participate in the Pokémon World Championship Qualifier. In the Pokémon Generations, The World Championships are contested on two different occasions: the Pokémon Generations World Championship (or the PGC), held during the end of summer every year The PGC is a real competition where participants will battle their Pokémon for the Grand Champion title. There will be a "World Championships: The Future" in the PGC. Pokémon Diamond, Pearl, and Platinum will all have the "Future" tag. The PGC is a qualifying event for the "Pokémon Generations World Championship" (or the PGC), or the Pokémon World Championship for short. The PGC battles will be held in the region of the world where Diamond, Pearl, or Platinum was released. Thus, the player who obtained Diamond, Pearl, or Platinum will encounter the various Pokémon for the first time in the PGC. The PGC is split into two stages: the Qualifying Event (a single round) and the Semi-Finals. The Semi-Finals is a double elimination round, whereby the bottom two trainers (or the top three, in the case that two trainers' teams are tied) will be eliminated. The PGC is the second qualifying event after the original Pokémon Red/Blue Championship. The PGC begins on the 20th of the Diamond's or Pearl's or Platinum's release date. The end of the PGC begins on the 13th of August, in which only the 6th spots of the "Top 16" Pokemon have been determined. The 4th Pokemon's assigned spots will be revealed on the 13th of August. The PGC will run at 18:00 UTC (9:00 PM PDT / 10:00 PM EDT) from August 21st until August 25th. The PGC will run in full and free of charge. Battles in the PGC

What's new:

Dark Wish The city of Baltimore is in tatters. The streets are full of zombies, and the only people who aren't infected are the stilled bodies of those in desperate need of rescue. But not all is black and dark. In an exchange eerily similar to the one that triggered the zombification of the city, Derek tells his ex-girlfriend, Jennifer, that he wants her as his flesh and blood. She's willing—if only he'd get her out of the city. ... Take a guess as to where the meat of this story is going? George A. Romero's Diary of the Dead. So, basically this is the zombie horror equivalent of a romantic comedy. Derek is the leader of a white supremacist militia group who has been rounding up the surviving people with dark hair. While I'd have to admit to being a fan of Derek, I'll be the first to be totally honest here: Skinhead Derek is one of the most abhorrently odious people I've encountered on a story. For a start, he seems to be totally oblivious to the long term implications of the things he's doing. He sees this as a race war. I'll accept that's the way he sees it, but then why does he have to roust anyone with brown curly hair? When the rescue squad shows up one day, the Steve Buscemi hero who probably delivers the rescue is black. Scratch that. He is black, which pretty much makes me throw the book at Derek. The Richard Linklater version of the story would be more like Shaun of the Dead than Diary of the Dead with a dash of the Dam Busters and some throwaway Will Smith. The hero, as in that movie, has a kind of quick witted wit and is far more interesting than Derek. The downside is that, with hindsight, it's clear that Shaun of the Dead was a prequel to a remake of Pride and Prejudice set in Ankh Morpork. This is, thankfully, a different story and Danielle, who shares Derek's views would be the sort of person who would be delighted to invite the black cop along (to which she was obviously cherry-picked for this story). But there are some truly excellent moments. Image recorded on an iPhone 6 - courtesy Apple Seeing
