The image should take the full width and the title should be within the div but still have some horizontal space (the title and image should fill the whole div). If I add overflow:auto to the div, then the image is not displayed, but the div takes its content's height. Here is my example code: #test { width: 200px; padding: 3px; overflow: auto; background-image: url(''); background-size: cover; } Test A: You can increase height of element as well. But it's only visual effect. If you need more flexible solution use js/jquery to set inner width and position elements before page load. A: You can force the height of the element to be the full height of its contents by applying this css: html,body { height: 100%; } #test { width: 200px; padding: 3px; overflow: auto; background-image: url(''); background-size: cover; height: 100%; } Also, you should remove the height property as it will break older browsers.
