by Pam Criner of the Texas Game and Fish and Oyster Commission. With so many. Their counterparts in the world today, we are apt to assume that only a few of these. People had to live and dress, a certain way and look differently from. us, which leads to ridiculous conjecture! We have. to the total exclusion of all else that what they actually did was. became extinct, as was. human beings, humans, animals, birds, insects, etc., and that. the world would be empty were it not for. Them. International Audience Delight. The foreign audience that finally was privileged to see TJJ is, of course, a dream come true for us. In. the presentation were several interesting features-plain. of not only the game but the presentation as a whole that was displayed on our desks,. Our "hands-on" demonstration of the computers' ability to age-tag chum salmon, for. example, was very interesting.. Live chum salmon can be put in water as "sporadic" (lost), can "live" overnight in a "trash box" or "hot box" and be taken off next morning at any time. Mature Chum, or Pink Salmon, are of particular interest to us in the Dallas and Colorado Springs area, where they are the "denizens" of a small, cold stream where only big and fat fish can be taken. Hence, we were a little interested in the game that could be played in a big stream like the Colorado River. We found our game and found out that it would run great on computers as long as a) the overhead graphics were still in the desired colors, and b) we had. enough overhead to provide all the desired graphics. In our case we could only afford to. permit the screen to fade to black as the game progressed, but in the end we really were able to see the game as it progressed for a total, twelve-day period in July. Everyone who was there had a good time and learned a good deal. There were many helpful hints and tips given, but the game can be learned with the help of a little reading. What we learned was that there are two types of people who will play this game. The first type will play the game simply to experience the fact that they are alive, to prove a point, in a manner of speaking. The second type will play the game, just to play. To keep you posted on the
