First, when running the cupsd executable with "ubuntu" or "ubuntu-keyring", it times out and fails to start. If you're a Debian user that may have CUPS installed, you can simply re-issue the previous update by doing: sudo apt-get dist-upgrade You'll have to find and remove the "novell" package if you've been using that to install CUPS (it's not in regular Debian or Ubuntu, and you have to install it in Debian to find it). After that, you'll need to remove the CUPS repository that you'd added to your system, otherwise you'll get a buggy CUPS installation when the next update happens. If you've been using the "ubuntu" package to install CUPS, the best way to correct the problem is to find and remove the "novell" package first (and then remove the ubuntu-keyring package), and then remove the cups repository that you've been using (like my instructions show here): If you're using a web-6d1f23a050
