With the transition to a native GPU-based user experience, the focus of all features will become smoother and more pleasant, but quite the opposite will happen for all existing features that will be deprecated. Here are some of the main features that will be deprecated: File dialogs, for photos, folders, or project files - In Photoshop, a single dialog box is used, with a changeable set of assets, and the create a new file inventory - Users will now select additional photos, folders, or projects, to be added through the tab on top of the Files dialog, rather than through a separate Files dialog box. Layer Tools, stage tools, screen tools - These tools will be replaced with a new wave of UI and workflows that will allow users to create the best user experience using the tools that fit their way of working. The state of the art UI and workflows will provide a consistent and pleasant experience for the users, regardless of how familiar their previous Photoshop experience is. The new tools will also be more powerful than the legacy set, while still being easy-to-learn. Change layer effects - Changes in the effects applied to a layer will be done through a single drag and drop setup for better user experience. We're excited about improving the workflows and user experience in this area over the years while delivering a stable environment as well. Change layer blending modes - Through a single drop-down menu, you will be able to change the layer blending modes, previously only available in the History panel. This change will be a part of the Material Settings panel with a recommended configuration for realistic workflows. Material Settings will become a game-changing feature in not only the way Photoshop works, but also in the way designers are thinking about, prototyping, and sharing their creative workflows.
