As Adobe transitions Photoshop from a tool for professional designers to one for everyone, the team has been hard at work building an incredible new experience for Adobe Photoshop. As part of this effort, the team has begun to shift the structure of Photoshop to make it easier for users to create and share work. This structure change is intended to simplify the way users work and share. For example, we have made it easier to create a new document with the File > Open dialog launched directly from an existing document (for those who prefer opening documents one at a time). Windows users can also now use the Share for Review to collaborate on an image without shipping files. We're also completely rethinking the way the Layers panel is organized to make it easier to work on an image and easier to manage—we're refreshing the workspace with new widgets and mouse gestures, and we've also added more clarity to the panel to help users find the layers they need.
